

Call to action 2011 : « Global Response to dementia »

ILC Global Alliance, avec ses partenaires dans 12 pays, a rédigé une déclaration
« Global Response to dementia »

C'est un appel à l'action, sur la base des résultats d'un colloque international : "La mondialisation de la démence : Questions et réponses », organisé par l'Alliance dans la ville du Cap, Afrique du Sud le 26 Octobre, 2010 dont les proceedings seront prochainement publiés.

Les objectifs de l'Alliance pour cette déclaration sont:

- 1) d'attirer l'attention mondiale sur l'augmentation de la prévalence et le fardeau que représentent les soins de la démence,
- 2) d'appeler à l'action des organismes mondiaux et intergouvernementaux, ainsi que les gouvernements nationaux et la société civile afin de préserver les droits des personnes atteintes de démence et soutenir leurs aidants naturels.

INTERNATIONAL LONGEVITY CENTER GLOBAL ALLIANCE

Cape Town Declaration on a Global Response to Dementia A Call to Action 2011

Preamble

Whereas, the International Longevity Center (ILC) Global Alliance is an international consortium whose members seek to understand and address the profound consequences of population ageing and increasing longevity on society and individuals;

We make this Declaration to enhance awareness of the rapidly increasing prevalence of dementia, to support the rights of persons with dementia as well the rights of family members and caregivers, and to call for action. For purposes of this document, dementia is defined as a chronic, progressive and terminal disorder involving deterioration in multiple areas of cognitive functioning, and one often associated with behavioural, psychological and functional impairment;

We note the growing number of persons aged 60 years and older, with the age category 80 years and older being the world's fastest growing population segment.¹ This pattern is accompanied by an increase in the incidence of age-related health conditions, including dementia which is projected to increase threefold from 35.6 million cases in 2010 to 115.4 million by 2050;²

We emphasise the devastating impact dementia has on society, families and individuals. Dementia robs afflicted persons of their memory, cognitive functioning, and the ability to fully contribute to family life and to participate in their community. It burdens families and society with the direct costs of health care and social care as well as indirect costs relating to the informal care of persons with dementia;

We note that by 2050 nearly 80 percent of the world's older population is projected to live in less developed regions.³ With competing demands for limited resources, nations in these regions will be particularly challenged to shoulder the direct and indirect costs of dementia care;

We observe with concern that healthcare needs of older persons, mental healthcare in particular, are often accorded a low priority relative to the needs of other healthcare in the developing world;

We affirm the human rights of all persons and, within the context of this document, emphasise the human rights of older persons and persons with disabilities. We recall the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights which recognises the right to 'the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health.' We further recall the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities which obligates State Parties to implement measures to promote and protect the rights of persons with disabilities who include those with dementia;

We celebrate the ten-year anniversary of the adoption of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, and urge governments to implement the Plan's recommendations: specifically, to develop strategies, to conduct research, to implement programmes, and to deliver services and training which 'increase the level of quality assessment and diagnosis of Alzheimer's and related disorders at an early stage,' and enhance the quality of life of persons with dementia and their caregivers; and

We invite international, regional and national organisations to support and adopt this Declaration and strengthen co-operation in addressing dementia and its impact.

Now, therefore, the International Longevity Center Global Alliance

Proclaims this Declaration on a Global Response to Dementia to be a call to action for all levels of government, and for civil society, academia, communities and ¹ An Ageing World: 2008 United States Census Bureau, International Population Reports.

² World Alzheimer Report 2009 Alzheimer's Disease International.

³ An Ageing World.

individuals to promote and protect the rights of persons with dementia as well as the rights of their family members and caregivers, by:

1. Engaging in a multidisciplinary dialogue to establish a common framework of standards for the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of dementia;
2. Developing and implementing intergovernmental and national integrated policies and plans of action dedicated to dementia, as well as comprehensive policies and plans of action on ageing which incorporate dementia;
3. Supporting increased funding by governmental and nongovernmental sources of research on all aspects of dementia and associated caregiving;
4. Urging pharmaceutical companies to supply affordable dementia medications to less developed regions;
5. Increasing the number of healthcare professionals trained in geriatrics, and in dementia in particular, in order to enhance dementia screening and diagnostic skills, and the provision of ongoing care;
6. Developing awareness of and education on healthy ageing, including measures to prevent or delay the onset of dementia and to reduce the discrimination and isolation often experienced by persons with dementia and their family members;
7. Establishing models of care for persons with dementia that partner healthcare services with housing services, community based care and legal protection;
8. Encouraging civil society organisations to provide increased advocacy and dementia care services to older persons with dementia and their caregivers;
9. Providing support, including training and respite care services, to informal caregivers of older persons with dementia;
10. Supporting the drafting and adoption of a United Nations convention on the human rights of older persons which would clarify those rights, create binding obligations on States and enhance accountability, and raise awareness of the issues that impact the lives of older persons including those with dementia.

International Longevity Center Global Alliance partners:

ILC Argentina
ILC Czech Republic
ILC Dominican Republic
ILC France
ILC India
ILC Israel
ILC Japan
ILC Singapore
ILC South Africa
ILC The Netherlands
ILC United Kingdom
ILC United States of America

Draft of February 2011